Marriage and Death Notices, when not exceed-

We have received a pamphlet, by Mr. Jeremiah Morton, invoking the attention of our people, both debtors and creditors, to the advantages to be derived by both, from the scheme of the Orange, Alexandria and Manassas Railroad, for the purchase of surplus lands along the line of their road, and the settling of immigrants thereon.

Under an act of the Legislature, passed at its last session, that Company has the right to acquire 200,000 acres of land, lying along the Railroad, at one or many points, in large or small bodies, as it may prefer. But to give all portions of the country through which the Road passes, an equal participation in the benefit of the scheme, it proposes to buy, at the

as it can at reasonable rates. It does not offer money for the land, and this, at first glance, might incline land-holders to reject any proposition for a purchase by the Company; but instead of money, it proposes to give coupon bonds, which, by previous arrangement between a debtor and creditor, can be used by the former in settling his indebtedness to the latter, and to the latter will prove a much more profitable investment than any security on real estate, since the conpons will will be eashed as soon as due, that is every six months, on presentation at the office of the Company; and the bonds, should be determine to sell, are convertable at once into cash, and he would certainly realize from the sale a larger percentage on his debts than he could by selling his debtor's lands on any terms, whether eash or credit.

The Company is a strong and prosperous one, and its resources are extending and increasing every year, and its ability to meet all its obligations, these bonds included, can scarcely be doubted or quescioned. This ability is recognized at all the money centres of the country, in New York, in Philadelphia and Baltimore. There is certainly nothing in this scheme

The Company, though a buyer, is not a speculator in lands. It proposes to sell them to thrifty, industrious immigrants, without any L. profit, and the sole advantage it proposes to itself, is from the increased freights and travel which the settling and cultivation of the idle lands along the road would occasion. In payment of these lands it proposes to receive these bonds from the immigrants, and not to demand money at all from them, though the immigrants, of course, have the option of paying in money if they choese.

This idea would cause a demand for these bonds in exact proportion to the number and necessities of the immigrants, who would buy them until they reached par value, in preference to paying money for the lands purchased of the Company. This demand would always keep the value of the bonds increasing, which increase would benefit the parties holding them, their creditors at once-induce them, if possi ble, to consent to receive these bonds in payonce to the company. They will get better prices and be able to pay a much larger pro-portion of their debts. We recommend the creditors to agree with their debtors, as by so doing they can realize more money in less time than by selling according to law, every foot of land on which they hold liens.

think the following verses have ever been published; they were given to me many years ago by a son of Sir Walter Scott's valued friend, Mr. Robert Shortrede, of Jedburgh, with the following account of the circumstances under which they were written:

Mr. Shortrede went one day into his sittingroom, where Sir Walter was waiting for him, and found Sir Walter with a volume of Burns in his hand, reading the letter which contained the famous lines of Bruce's address to his men before Bannockburn. As he closed the volume, Sir Walter said: "I always thought that the opening of those beautiful lines, as you read them by themselves, was too abrupt, and that if Burns had not sent them in a letter to a friend, he would have introduced them with some sort of description of the scene, or of the circumstances under which they were spoken.

Mr. Shortrede at first questioned the soundness of this criticism, but after some discussion. asked what kind of introduction his friend would have? Sir Walter rejoined, "Why, something of this kind,"-and taking a pencil. wrote on the fly leaf of the volume of Burns

AN EXTENSIVE WHEAT FIELD. -The Stockton (Cal.) Independent, of June 24, says: On the west side of the San Joaquin river, in this valley, there is a grain field which extends for thirty-five miles, and is of an average width ofeight miles, thus covering an area of 179,200 acres. Persons who have lately travelled through this immense grain field estimate the total average yield at sixteen bushels to the acre, which will give a total yield of 2,867,200 bushels, or 86.015 tons. There is, however, a much larger area cultivated in grain on the east side of the San Joaquin than on the west side. From Lathrop to Merced, a distance of the market before the rainy season.
